Early childhood trauma often creates havoc with the developing bodies and brains of young children that follows them throughout their life.

How can we help a child regulate through relationships and teach them the power of self-regulation?

Ginger Meyer, a Certified Clinical Trauma Professional, will train the participant to effectively assist students in co-regulation. Ginger will engage learners through hands on activities and virtual presentations to help professionals connect with children in a positive way, while coaching them to master self-regulation skills.

This will be a synchronous four hour workshop spread across two dates and will require some virtual participation.

Who should attend?

General Education Teachers, Special Education Teachers, Paraprofessionals, Social Workers, School Nurses, SLPs, OTs, Psychologists, Administrators, and anyone who works with children.

- increase the understanding of the mechanisms in the body and brain which lead to chronic activation of the fear cycle.
- increase the number of tools the participants have to be able to decrease behaviors in the children they serve.
- learn through example and case study effective methods for co-regulation between themselves and their students.
